Early enrollment figures in, show slight increase

By Caroline Ting
Editor

Despite many filled classrooms, OKCCC's spring enrollment is barely above last year's. Annmarie Shirazi, dean of planning and institutional effectiveness, said OKCCC is experiencing a 4.4 percent enrollment increase from 10,735 students last spring to 11,311 students this spring.

Since enrollment is still continuing for those who are signing up for fast track or eight-week classes, the 4.4 percent increase is an early estimate.

Shirazi said what she really anticipates is a 3 percent increase in enrollment once the enrollment for all the other classes is over, and the add/drop period is completed. She also expects the college to have approximately 3,500 full-time equivalent students this spring.

"We've had such phenomenal growth in the last number of semesters," Shirazi said. "A 3 percent growth [rate is] average if you analyze it in a long period of time. Over 10 years, it's about 3.5 to 4 percent, so we're actually growing at about the rate that the average says we would be growing."

Shirazi said a better economy could have contributed to the slowing of enrollment increase.

However, she said, it is too early to look at the impact the economy may have on the numbers because there might be those students who simply have decided to wait until later in the spring to enroll this semester.

OKCCC President Bob Todd agreed. He said what universities typically experience is — as the economy strengthens, more people are working and working more hours. Therefore, they have less time for school. So the economy may have had some effect on the rate of growth, he said.

"However, when you look at the [enrollment] numbers, there's still a positive trend in terms of increase," Todd said. "It's within what [the college] has anticipated so we're meeting the needs of more students."

Closed sections and full classrooms may also have led many students to believe enrollment was up more than it actually is.

Many OKCCC students couldn't get into classes because the classes they wanted were full. Brenda Harrison, associate vice president for academic affairs, said there are still available seats for students in many classes, maybe just not at the times the students want.

"[The college] has enough seats for students," Harrison said. "I think the question is: Are students willing to attend at the times when we have classes available?"

Harrison said the most popular times students tend to

Oklahoma primary set for Feb. 3

By Jaci Dake
Contributing Writer

The Oklahoma Democratic presidential primary is Feb. 3. Oklahoma is one of seven states holding presidential primaries on that day.

The Oklahoman reported that, unlike previous years, recent applicants for voter registration will be allowed to vote without a voter identification card, provided they bring a current photo ID with them.

An AOL straw poll shows U.S. Sen. John Kerry projected as winning the state. The poll also indicates the actual result could favor U.S. Sen. John Edwards, Wesley Clark, or U. S. Sen. Joe Lieberman.

Edwards, born in South Carolina, is said to have a finished second with 29 percent, and Clark and Edwards tied for third place with 12 percent each.

Local county election boards have information about polling locations open for the primary.

To register to vote in Oklahoma, the applicant must be at least 18 years old, an American citizen and a resident of Oklahoma. Several of the candidates had scheduled appearances in the state before the primary vote according to The Oklahoman. Edwards was scheduled to be in Durant on Jan. 28 before moving on to Tulsa. Lieberman was scheduled to visit Tulsa on Jan. 29, and Clark visited Oklahoma City on Jan. 29.

More information on registering to vote, the primaries, the candidates and, after 7 p.m. on Feb. 3, the primary results, can be found at www.state.ok.us/~elections/.

Bush salutes community colleges

President Bush's 2004 State of the Union Speech Jan. 20 addressed many issues such as immigration law and abstinence among teens, but one proposal that might have jumped out to college students, faculty and staff was the president's proposal to increase support for community colleges.

Bush said he wanted to do this in order to "train workers for the industries that are creating the most new jobs." He has already started speaking with schools in Ohio, Arizona and New Mexico about his plan to provide $250 million in grants for job-training in community colleges.

Oklahoma Higher Education Chancellor Paul Risser said on www.okhighered.org that Oklahoma community colleges have a good chance at receiving these federal grants.

Bush's support toward the nation's community colleges is a great opportunity for employees and students at those institutions. It's about time somebody noticed the important work community colleges are doing.

Ike Glass, chairman of the Oklahoma State Regents for Higher Education, said, "This is a great way for the president to acknowledge the essential role that our community colleges play in helping employers and workers."

With all the increases in tuition at universities, more students seem to be coming to community colleges for their higher education. The student population hike in recent at OKCCC is proof of that.

The American Federation of Teachers said on customwire.ap.org that Bush was going in the right direction, but that it is an insignificant amount compared to the budget cuts community colleges have come in contact with.

When calculating it, $250 million might be a rather small amount to work with. There are about 1,200 community colleges in America, according to www.miami.com. When you divide that by $250 million, you get about $20,000 per community college. OKCCC's budget for the 2003-04 school year was about $32 million. A $20,000 grant would amount to less than one tenth of one percent of that annual budget.

But even with that said, it still is a great opportunity for community colleges to get some respect. According to Risser, Oklahoma has had a good record for winning federal grants in the past.

Community colleges have been in the hole for awhile now and need any money they can get. It might not help much, but it definitely won't hurt anything either.

Students should be allowed to park in faculty/staff spaces

To the editor:

In the Pioneer issue for Monday, Jan. 26, under the You Asked For It column, a student asked why we cannot park in faculty area after 5 p.m. or 5:30 p.m. Keith Bourque, coordinator of campus safety and security, sent back an answer that there are adjunct faculty members who teach until 10:30 p.m.

Here are my questions for the so called "safety coordinator."

We all know that the bulk of the classes are in the morning; hence, we only have 20 to 30 percent of the entire staff in the evening. So why can't you allocate the spaces to be shared by students?

As the safety coordinator, aren't you supposed to look out for the safety of the students too? How safe is it to walk past 30 parking spaces to get to your vehicle, which you had to park one mile away from the classes because when you came in the closer spaces, they were already taken by students who have afternoon classes?

Please take some time and visit the evening class time, around 7 p.m., and find out what percentage of faculty and staff parking are being used. Then base your reasoning on safety for the students and tell us if it is worthy for students to park so far, especially in the evening when at times there are no security officers to give students an escort to the parking lot.

In short, consider this a request, allow students to park in faculty/staff parking area in the evening.

Most other universities in the state allow students to park in (faculty/staff parking area) in the evening due to security reasons. I am sure the University of Oklahoma and the University of Central Oklahoma are two of them.

Ashton plays God in 'Butterfly'

The chaos theory states, "If a butterfly flaps its wings on one side of the world, the ripple effect could cause a tempest on the other." That's exactly what happens in the movie "The Butterfly Effect."

Evan (Ashton Kutcher) is a boy who goes through childhood with severe mental blockouts. Dramatic events that occurred with friends Kayleigh (Amy Smart), Lenny (Elden Henson) and Tommy (William Lee Scott) are left blank in his mind. He writes in a journal every day to try and jog his memory, but is never successful.

As a psychology major in college, Evan has taught himself a way of suppressing blackouts until the night he pulls out his old journals. He finds his blocked memory released, leaving him remembering everything. For better or worse, Evan tries to "play God" by going into the past, using his memory to change one dramatic event after another. He finds himself not just changing one thing, but his entire life.

This movie is incredibly suspenseful, original and unpredictably twisted. Kutcher (who, by the way, is one of the executive producers) transitioned well from being Mr. Goofball, funny-man in "That 70s Show" and "Dude, Where's My Car" to a serious and unnaturally funny actor.

At first it was a little weird to see him without that smirk on his face and a trucker cap on, but five minutes after he appeared I got lost in his character. It's a little less than two hours, but it definitely doesn't feel like it. Every scene was obviously thought out, never leaving a feeling of something missing.

It makes you leave the theater feeling disoriented and fulfilled at the same time. There's something great about a movie that is actually finished and doesn't make you have to watch a shoddy sequel.

This suspense thriller gets an A in this critic's book. Find out for yourself. "The Butterfly Effect" is rated R for violence, sexual content and brief drug use. It's in theaters now.

'Crazy Love' is unpredictable

There are a very few times when you go to a play and expect one thing but get another and turn out to be happier about it. Seeing "Crazy Love" at the Skyline Theater is one of those times.

When I made plans to go, I had expected that I would be seeing a play with definable scenes, acts and a multitude of characters. What I got instead can only be defined as an assisted stand-up comedy act. There are only three different characters and each of them gets a short stage time.

There is the nurse, Nurse Libby (Libby Taggart), who has the least amount of stage time, but sings in both of the play's short songs. There is the psychiatrist, Dr. Anderson (Mark Anderson), who gets a little bit more face time with the audience than Nurse Libby. And finally, there is the patient, John Branyan (John Branyan).

Branyan is the heart of the show. With the most face time and the strongest character he made us laugh for all but about 10 seconds of the show. And those 10 seconds were for breathing.

The main story line involves Branyan coming to see Dr. Anderson because he is dealing with being married and having to deal with his relatives. So we are taken on a journey through the relationship of Branyan and his wife, from dating all the way through having his four kids.

Branyan plays the parts of his kids, his wife, his mother and various other family members. He shows his versatility with the voices and physical characteristics that define each separate character. Branyan also was the co-writer of the play along with Anderson and writer Ritch Shydner.

If you visit the Skyline Theater to see "Crazy Love" you will not be disappointed. The Skyline Theater is located on the corner of Main Street and Hudson in downtown Oklahoma City about one mile from Bricktown. The play will be performed every Friday and Saturday night at 8:30 p.m. until Valentine's Day.

"Crazy Love" gets an emphatic A+ from me.

Attendance counts

"Eighty percent of success is showing up."

—Woody Allen (1935 – present)

We are barely two weeks into a new semester and already we have students on the verge of not getting through the semester successfully. They started off poorly by not showing up for the first week of class. Some faculty have notified us of students who missed exams or attended class for the first time only to discover the first test is due. Before the dust even settles from the latest heavy enrollment period, we are having to discuss options with students who didn't show up because they thought they wouldn't miss anything.

It's hard to believe in 2004 some people still buy into that urban legend that tells them going to class is optional and nothing important happens on the first day. Nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, some senior institutions now drop people from their rolls if they don't show up for the first class, thereby freeing up space for those who have been patiently waiting for it. Students who intend to take those classes but will have to miss for some reason, contact the professor before the class begins to make arrangements.

Attending the first day of class affords you an opportunity to meet your professors and go through the syllabi with them. That document is an important one which outlines what is expected of you, what assignments you have to do and when they are due, how often you will test, whether there are penalties for absences and so forth. It also gives you the contact information of your professor in case you have to be absent.

Faculty are human, and they will try to work with you if you have an unfortunate life circumstance in the middle of the semester. However, if you convey to them that their class isn't important, they'll be less inclined to help. Not going to class conveys that message strongly. Imagine taking a new job and not showing up on the first day because "all they're going to do is show me around." That wouldn't make a good impression, would it? Going to school is like going to work except the payoff is in skills instead of a salary.

OKCCC allows enrollment through the first week of class. This gives students an opportunity to adjust their schedules. Knowing what is required in a particular class can help you decide whether the load will be too heavy and demanding, or if there will be other potential conflicts for you. This allows you to make an informed decision about withdrawing while you still have a chance for a refund. If you've already put yourself into a "playing catch-up" situation, come by the Center for Student Development to discuss what your options might be and how you can get yourself back onto a successful track.

Retention pond to be finished on leap day

By Nicole Padilla
Staff Writer

New students, maybe even some returning students, may be asking themselves what that big hole is on the northeast corner of the OKCCC campus.

To answer that question, the big hole is going to be a flood control pond. The project, which began in August of 2003, is aiming for a completion date of late February.

Chris Snow, physical plant assistant director, said from Dec. 29 to Jan. 11, the remaining topsoil was removed. Then from Jan. 12 to Feb. 15 construction of the sidewalks and other miscellaneous structures around the pond will take place. Finally, from Feb. 1 to Feb. 29 the grass, sod and trees will be planted.

"The progress of construction of the pond is moving quite smoothly," Snow said. "The pond will be an asset to the college as well as the community as a whole."

Art Bode, Vice President of Business and Finance, said in an earlier interview, the pond will be used to hold the water runoff from the campus and surrounding neighborhoods to the south and east of the college. This will prove beneficial during times of heavy rain.

In addition to serving as a water retention/detention pond, there also will be jogging and walking trails that encircle the pond and a fountain. It will give students, as well as members of the community, another area where they can exercise or just relax.

Wittwer Construction is responsible for digging up approximately 225,000 cubic yards of dirt for the project. At its deepest point, the pond will be 17 feet deep said Kenny Zerr, Wittwer superintendent.

Tyler Rogers, communications major, said she thinks the project will have been worth the wait once it is completed.

"Right now I think that it is a huge eyesore, but in the long run I think it will be very pretty," Rogers said.

Israeli percussionist coming to OKCCC theater Feb. 10

As the saying goes, we all march to the beat of a different drummer. If that is true, Chen Zimbalista must march to his own beat.

Zimbalista, a world-renowned percussionist, will be playing a concert in the OKCCC theater as a part of the year-long Cultural Awareness series.

Zimbalista is "a virtual one-man band," according to the Shupp Artists Management website.

According to the website, he uses his hands, feet and voice to play the "marimba, vibraphone, drums, cymbals and numerous other percussion instruments."

Zimbalista's repertoire includes classical, jazz, blues and the occasional rock song.

He has appeared as a guest soloist with the Israel Philharmonic, and the Jerusalem Post said he is a brilliant percussionist.

Zimbalista will be appearing at 7 p.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 10 in the college theater. Tickets are $10 for the public and $8 for stu-

Affordable health care offered at south side clinic

Oklahoma Community Health Services, Inc. offers services on sliding fee scale

By Billy Adams
Staff Writer

Students may find easier access to affordable health care now that the Oklahoma Community Health Services, Inc. has opened in a new south side location two blocks south of Interstate 240 and Western at 1025 Straka Terrace.

Jo Burtrum, the center's chief executive officer, said the center offers primary medical and dental care on a sliding scale fee system. The sliding scale is based on both total family income and the number of people in the household. That means a person pays according to what he or she can afford.

Services offered range from family medicine, obstetrics and gynecology, and dental services to very limited behavioral services, Burtrum said.

In order to prove income level, the center asks for some kind of documentation. This can be a pay stub, a letter from your employer, an income tax form, or a letter from a church or civic organization she said.

The move to the south side has put the center in a bigger facility that can handle a steady flow of people, said Pat Nguyen, center receptionist.

"We are always busy [but] we see anyone who has need," she said.

The center accepts both Oklahoma and Texas Medicaid. They also are a provider to numerous private insurance plans.

Open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Thursdays, the center takes walk-ins but Burtrum suggests making an appointment to ensure being seen in a timely manner.

For appointments or other questions call the center at 632-6688.

Professor appointed to second term on Faculty Advisory Council

By Nicole Padilla
Staff Writer

Dr. Martha George, psychology professor, has been appointed to serve on the Faculty Advisory Council of the Oklahoma State Regents for Higher Education for the second time. George said she is the only person in history to serve more than one term on the FAC.

George has taught at the college for 22 years. She said she is honored to serve a second term.

"It is a tremendous amount of work and time investment," she said. "I believe it is important work, so I agreed to do it."

George said the mission of the council is to offer advice to the State Regents. She said she tries to present the concerns of community college faculty.

"The goal is to create quality institutions so our students are prepared."

She said some of her favorite FAC work takes place during joint projects between members of the FAC and the Student Advisory Board. She said she enjoys hearing what the students have to say about the issues that are brought up.

On Jan. 25, George attended a joint meeting of the FAC and the Student Advisory Board to discuss and agree upon joint resolutions to be presented to the State Regents. She said there were nine issues brought up at the meeting.

Some of those were regarding debt management, retention and graduation, adjunct faculty and civic engagements.

Those in attendance discussed the issues and had to reach a consensus.

The council was established in 1990 and consists of seven members.

There are two representatives from regional universities, two community college representatives (one urban and one rural), one representative from the University of Oklahoma, one representative from Oklahoma State University and one representative from private colleges.

Council members serve two-year terms and are elected at the annual fall meeting of the State Faculty Assembly.

Broadcasting prof hangs with TV execs

By Lacey Lett
Staff Writer

Jerry Springer, Chris Matthews and Mark Burnett of "Survivor" had the pleasure to rub elbows with OKCCC's very own Professor Gwin Faulconer-Lippert recently.

After being selected as a fellow by the National Association of Television Program Executives, Faulconer-Lippert attended the annual national conference Jan. 14 through the 20 in Las Vegas.

She was encouraged to apply by members of the Oklahoma Broadcast Education Association of which she is president.

Faulconer-Lippert spent five days in Las Vegas talking with some of the most powerful broadcasters on television today, as well as executives for top networks including Entertainment television and Fox News.

"It seems pretty incredible to be walking down the hall with the television powerhouses like Aaron Spelling, Brenda Hampton (producer and writer of "Mad About You"), Jerry Springer, Ben Silverman (creator of "The Restaurant") and Larry King," Faulconer-Lippert said.

She said she thought it was interesting how many of those people had ties with Oklahoma.

"I think it means that we don't think of Oklahoma as involved as it really is."

Faulconer-Lippert has been a professor of mass media communications at OKCCC for 15 years and recently won the President's Award for Excellence in teaching.

She also is a radio personality on 1000 KTOK news and helps OETA with numerous fund-raising occasions. When not doing that, she serves as a media coach for the Youth City Council, an adviser for the Jesus House and a member of the Volunteer Center for central Oklahoma.

Her advice for students going into the media field is strong.

"The magic word for all broadcast students — whether it be reality TV or non-reality TV — [is] writing, writing, writing. That is the number one skill to make it."

Organizations Fair promotes wide variety of campus clubs

By Nicole Padilla
Staff Writer

A total of 23 clubs and organizations participated in the Student Organizations Fair, said Karlen Grayson, student clubs and organizations assistant.

The event, which took place on Wednesday, Jan. 28 and Thursday, Jan. 29 in the college union, was a highly successful one, she said.

"I'm ecstatic about it!" Grayson said. "They all did a good job in being creative in their displays and everything looks wonderful." Grayson is responsible for coordinating the fair every semester. She said she thinks it is a great chance for clubs to recruit new members.

Many of the clubs' booths had offerings for passersby in hopes of getting them to stop and see what their club was all about.

One such club was the International Students Association (ISA), who gave away bags of cotton candy. Club president Johnny Koerner has big plans for ISA this semester.

"We are going to offer a platform for the international communities of the school," Koerner said. "We hope to increase the general understanding of the very diverse cultures in the college."

ISA plans on hosting intercultural get-togethers throughout the semester and are planning a trip to China in conjunction with the business department.

Chi Alpha, a Christian religious organization, also had a booth set up. Chi Alpha members Ben Coffee and Nicole Fischer said lots of activities are planned for the upcoming semester.

"Come and enjoy the fellowship and worship," said Coffee. "There are lots of activities, lots of fun and we always have food!"

Another club excited about finding new members is the Gay and Lesbian Alliance (GALA).

GALA is looking for students who want to promote equality at the college and community.

"We love our club," said Charles Shuller, president. "We are glad that the college has allowed us to have a club here on campus."

Others like Michael Davidson, the president of College Republicans, want to raise awareness about what their club is about.

"Most people are in the dark about the subject of politics," Davidson said.

Some students hope to open the eyes of others to new views and understandings. Student Art Guild President Jeremy Williams wants those joining his club to broaden their perspectives.

"Whenever you think of art it's not just drawing, it's anything you can think of as a skill," Williams said as he set up his unique chain mail jewelry and other creations to display.

For more information on the clubs and organizations at the college contact Karlen Grayson in the Student Life office at 682-1611, ext. 7185.

Classroom increase will lead to larger choice of class times sign up for are from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 5:30 p.m. in the evenings. She said 44 sections of classes were canceled this semester due to either low enrollment or lack of quality instructors. Whether enrollment increases a lot or a little, some students have realized the key to getting the classes a person wants is to enroll early.

"Enrollment,"

Premed sophomore David Hathcock said he didn't want to make the same mistake he did last semester by waiting until the last minute to enroll.

He enrolled online this time around, a process he described as being easy.

Hathcock said all of his classes are full this semester and there are still students who want to get in.

Freshman Sharee Boling, physical therapy assistant major, said she learned from her older brother that she should always enroll as early as possible.

She said all of her classes are full as well. Her psychology professor told the class it's the largest he's ever taught.

Hathcock and Boling

both agree that enrolling at OKCCC is not difficult, as long as you get it done early.

Hathcock said all the administrators are very helpful and are great at trying to help students and giving them advice.

Todd said students will have even more choices of class times by next fall.

He said the college will move three campus offices to the South Facility located at 11935 S. Interstate-44 Service Road this semester. The vacated space on the second and third floors of the main building will be modified into instructional space to accommodate more students.

Todd also said when the enrollment numbers are tallied, he believes the college will either be at or above the enrollment projections.

"We've been consistently well ahead of our enrollment projections over the last several semesters," he said.

"I just think that again, you're seeing evidence of the fact that students are choosing OKCCC as their preferred place to continue college education," Todd said.

"That, for me, is the purpose for being here, for being successful in doing it."
