OCCC changes student grade appeal process

The revised procedure keeps professors from having final say about a grade dispute

The President’s Cabinet voted to approve changes to “Procedure 4030: Student Appeal of a Grade” at a meeting April 11. Academic Affairs Vice President Felix Aquino said the change will take effect immediately, although earlier reports said changes would likely not take place before fall.

“Part of the issue was that new policies go into the student handbook, and the student handbook has to be printed.”

The new appeals process now allows for a committee to make the final determination in changing a final grade that a student disagrees with, whereas the former process gave the professor who gave the grade the final say.

According to the revised policy, the first step in a grade appeal is for a student to meet with the instructor who assigned the final grade within 90 calendar days to attempt to resolve the matter.

If the grade is not changed and the student continues to disagree with it, the student may submit a completed “Student Appeal of a Grade” form to the appropriate division office.

The division dean will then request information from the instructor and review the case before meeting with the student.

The dean will make a recommendation to the instructor based on the findings and notify the student in writing by certified mail of the instructor’s decision.

If the student still believes the grade is incorrect, then the student may request an appeal hearing before a Grade Appeal Committee in writing, directed to the Associate Vice President for Academic Affairs. The request must be within five working days of receipt of notification about the instructor’s decision.

Under the new policy, the committee is composed of six faculty members, one from each division, not to include the instructor.

Security veteran dead at 58

OCCC Safety and Security Sgt. Larry Lundy, 58, died Saturday, April 23, following an emergency procedure at Integris Southwest Medical Center.

Lundy worked at OCCC for 17 years, said Human Resources Assistant Jo Burris.

English Professor Bertha Wise said she first met Lundy not as a security officer, but as a student.

“I first got to know Larry when I took over teaching a literature class from a colleague who was too ill to continue,” Wise said.

“We began studying poetry right when I took over, and Larry was a little bit negative about that. He didn’t think anyone needed to study poetry.”

“I listened to his comments about old, dead, stuffy poets … and I assured him I had something to say,” she said.

After four weeks of reading, writing, and discussing poetry, he admitted that my choice of poems and poets were ‘not so bad’ and he thought maybe I’d like to read something.”

Then, Lundy handed Wise a sheet of paper on which he had written a verse.

“I don’t recall the words, but I could tell his poem was from his heart and he would make it as enjoyable as possible,” she said.

Over the years, Wise said, Lundy would occasionally share more poems he had written with her.

“A few years ago, when he and (Lundy’s wife) Debbie celebrated one of their anniversaries, he proudly announced that he had all sorts of plans, including a poem for his wife.”

Hold on to your head gear, folks. After all the ranting this writer has done about ineffective and useless politicians, here’s a shout-out to two of that profession who actually do their jobs, and do them well.

In November of 2010, the friends and family of 26-year-old Sgt. Jason McCluskey gathered for his funeral in McAlester.

But as they tried to pay their last respects and grieve for the fallen soldier, members of the radical Kansas group Westboro Baptist Church staged a protest just 500 feet away.

WBC members believe God kills soldiers for defending a nation that allows homosexuality. This inhumane behavior, which heaps more pain onto an already grieving family, has been upheld by the Supreme Court as a valid expression of free speech.

But Oklahoma State Sen. Josh Brecheen (Coalgate-R) decided enough was enough after a call from one of his constituents alerted him to the issue.

Sen. Brecheen introduced Senate Bill 406, which prohibits protests two hours before or after a funeral and pushes the protesters 1,000 feet away from the funeral instead of the former 500 feet away.

Brecheen said he felt the bill was necessary in light of recent statements made by WBC members.

"After their recent Supreme Court win, the Westboro members said they were going to quadruple the number of protests and pickets," Brecheen said.

"As close as Oklahoma is to their base, I hope that further limiting what they can do in this state will make us a less tempting target for their activities."

In an astounding show of competence, the bill was voted through both houses unanimously, before being sent to the governor’s desk.

And there’s the second shout-out: Oklahoma Gov. Mary Fallin signed SB 406 into law on April 18.

This is what we need more of. Politicians who know their job is to represent their constituents and then actually do so.

So many thanks and much praise to the legislators of Oklahoma, and Gov. Fallin and Sen. Brecheen in particular.

Alien fugitive captures laughter, fun

Anyone with a pulse who enjoys laughing out loud should seriously consider watching “Paul.”

This movie intertwines science fiction with brilliantly written comedic elements around nearly every turn.

This is the unlikely story of an alien on Earth named Paul, (voiced by Seth Rogen) who crashes on Earth 60 years earlier and has been in the hands of the U.S. government since.

Paul realizes his usefulness is nearing completion and understands the next option his captives are planning involves extracting his brain.

Needless to say Paul decides it’s time to hit the ground running. Paul stumbles upon a couple of U.K. nerdy comicbook fanatics, (Simon Pegg and Nick Frost) traveling across the U.S., visiting comic book conventions on a once-in-a-lifetime road trip. After this trio becomes acquainted they soon begin traveling across the heartland of the America.

Soon after their improbable meeting, the Englishmen learn Paul is a fugitive from the U.S. government and running for his life.

The movie is literally laugh-out-loud funny with costars Kristen Wiig and Jane Lynch lighting up the screen.

This movie is rated R for language and some mild violence, but for those who already curse like sailors, you will greatly enjoy the erratic storyline that does not fail to please.

As soon as “Paul” hits the shelves, buy or rent it immediately. I plan to buy it to watch again and again.

No More Knots unties all stress

With finals fast approaching, many students are desperate for a little stress relief. And what better way to relax than with a full-body massage?

No More Knots/Burton Chiropractic located at 3820 N. Rockwell in Bethany, has been in business for about 20 years. But don’t be fooled by the numbers — they just translate into experience for Dr. Barry Burton, who has dedicated his career to providing relaxation and pain relief techniques for his customers.

After all, there’s got to be a reason why Burton’s patients range from college students to a Beverly Hills interior designer.

Upon walking into No More Knots, customers are greeted not by a team of amateurs fresh out of cosmetology school, but instead by a cozy, home-like reception area and calming water fountain.

When it’s time for your appointment, you are escorted to your own private massage room, where you choose from a large selection of soothing tunes to relax to. Then, the magic begins.

Marti, a registered nurse with about 10 years of experience as a masseuse, has a smile that is seconded only by her magical hands.

For $35, she will treat your body to a 30-minute massage that rejuvenates, revitalizes, and downright feels amazing.

The time may seem short, but keep in mind that Marti can accomplish in a half hour what those beauty school novices couldn’t pull off in two.

By the time she is done, you probably won’t remember the meaning of mathematics — or that you have a huge chemistry final next Monday.

In addition to the wonderful massages, No More Knots also offers a revolutionary technique perfected by Dr. Burton himself.

Dr. Burton also offers cutting-edge muscular skeletal pain relief, a painless procedure that provides fast, all-natural relief for all types of muscular aches and pains.

Depending on the intensity of your injury or problem, each session can cost between $40 and $80.

Although No More Knots is appointment-only, it’s easy to schedule a session with hours available Monday through Saturday.

To schedule an appointment, call 405-787-6363. Whether you stop in for some one-time stress relief or you become a regular customer, you don’t know relief until you have No More Knots.

OCCC’s regents add two new members

JOEY STIPEK

The OCCC Board of Regents has added two members — Devery R. Youngblood and Tony J. Tyler.

With the U.S. and Oklahoma state flags as a backdrop, Youngblood was sworn in Monday, April 18, in the A. L. Snipes board room.

Youngblood has been appointed for four years to fill the unexpired term of current Oklahoma Secretary of Commerce Dave Lopez.

Tyler has been appointed to serve a seven-year term to replace regent Robert Jenkins, whose term ended April 22.

OCCC Regents Chairman Ben Brown said OCCC is pleased with Gov. Mary Fallin’s appointments.

“Gov. Mary Fallin has given us an excellent members for the Board of Regents,” Brown said.

Youngblood has served in the role of Community Affairs Manager for the Chickasaw Nation since 2007 and was senior adviser and district director for U.S. Rep. Ernest Istook, where he led efforts to secure funding for the realignment of Interstate-40, build the new Federal Building downtown, and helped restructure the tax code to help bring about the Skirvin Hotel renovations.

Youngblood also has spent eight years leading private sector development efforts surrounding Oklahoma City’s original MAPS Program, with more than $1 billion of private sector investment created during Youngblood’s tenure.

Youngblood led redevelopment after the Murrah Bombing as founding president of Automobile Alley, led massive Bricktown development that included Bass Pro and Hardins Theaters, and developed the Downtown in December promotion and holiday season ice rink.

Brown said the selection of Youngblood helps bring diversity to the board.

“We wanted the regents and student body to be representative of the total population,” Brown said.

“He brings an element of knowledge and experience from the Native American community that we’ve lacked. I think that is an additional benefit to the college and students,”

OCCC President Paul Sechrist said he views Youngblood as a tremendous asset to the regents.

“It’s always wonderful to have a highly respected member of the community join the board,” Sechrist said.

“Mr. Youngblood is well respected through his political affiliations as a community leader and now, bringing the Chickasaw Nation into what he represents.

“He is a person who understands the value of education in terms of the economic development of the state.”

Youngblood said he never imagined he’d have such an opportunity.

“When I was approached, I was completely blown away,” he said.

Janice Phillips administers the oath Devery Youngblood must take to be on OCCC’s Board of Regents.

“I believe so strongly in the mission of OCCC,” Youngblood said being appointed to the OCCC regents is personal as well.

“My daughter went to OCCC at a time when she was not ready to go to college,” he said.

“She needed this interim step and it was truly life changing for her.”

Youngblood and his wife Karen live in Yukon where, he said, their lives include a lot of time on the go with family and friends. They have four children and four grandchildren.

“The opportunity to come and be a part of this and give back in some way means a great deal to me.”

Tyler has a background in media.

He is the vice president of Tyler Media and also serves on the South Oklahoma City Chamber of Commerce.

Sechrist said this also is an appointment that will benefit OCCC.

“Regent Tyler is highly respected in the business community,” Sechrist said.

“Coupled with his strong ties to southwest Oklahoma City, he will bring a business and community perspective to the governance of OCCC.”

Attempts to reach Tyler for comment about his appointment were unsuccessful as of press time.

Lealon Taylor works to increase scholarships

ERIN PEDEN
Staff Writer

A former employee of the state education department is bringing his expertise to OCCC. Lealon Taylor recently joined the administration, replacing Pat Berryhill who recently retired.

Taylor, OCCC’s new executive director of Institutional Advancement, arrived in January, just in time for the spring semester.

Previously, Taylor was employed by the Oklahoma State Department of Education where he served as Chief of Staff for the agency and worked daily for promoting public education.

Taylor said when he heard about the position at OCCC, he was more than excited to take on the challenge.

“When I first heard about this job opportunity, I knew immediately I wanted to be part of the tremendous success that OCCC has accomplished so far,” Taylor said.

“I also knew that Dr. Paul Sechrist had an excellent reputation as a college president and wanted to be a part of his team.”

As Executive Director of Institutional Advancement, it is Taylor’s job to help organize and create events that will help benefit students financially.

His office works in partnership with the OCCC Foundation, which primarily funds scholarships for students.

It also oversees the marketing and public relations of the college, and coordinates grant opportunities from government and private sources.

Big Truck Taco day, which was held on campus April 7, was just one of the special events Taylor organized as a fundraiser for the Foundation.

Taylor said being able to promote all the positive aspects of OCCC is very rewarding.

He said his goal is to inform everyone of the excellent educational and cultural opportunities offered, and show that OCCC really cares about its students and success.

“We have a great reputation, and I want to continue that positive image in the greater Oklahoma City community,” Taylor said.

“I also want to grow the OCCC Foundation, which will expand student scholarship opportunities.”

Taylor said he is most excited about the low-cost tuition and small class sizes offered to students.

“I am amazed at the quality staff, faculty and student body at OCCC,” Taylor said.

“I am proud each and every time I tell someone I am employed at OCCC.”

SB 858 ISN’T DEAD YET, JUST DORMANT

Campus weapons bill fails this session

JOEY STIPEK
Editor
editor@occc.edu

Brittany Williams, veterinary medicine major who opposes guns on campus, can rest easy for now since Senate Bill 858 — ”The Firearm Owner Privacy Act,” that would permit citizens with concealed carry licenses in Oklahoma to bring concealed weapons onto college campuses — is now dead, at least until the next legislative session.

The bill passed the Oklahoma Senate 44-4 but was never heard by a House committee, according to the Oklahoma State webserver.

Williams said, in particular, she fears the possible actions of irrational thinkers and heroes should the bill eventually pass.

"I think you need the time — if you have a gun — to think about using it," Williams said.

Senate Bill 858 was authored by State Sen. Steve Russell (R-District 45, Oklahoma City).

According to House rules, it’s considered dormant this session but could be considered again next year.

A few other states, including Colorado, Michigan, Utah, and Virginia, permit firearms on campuses.

Russell cited Colorado State University as an example on how concealed carry on large college campuses can work.

"What about the five-foot, two-inch college professor walking out late at night after class who has no recourse to defend herself?” he said.

Russell said he thinks the rights of every American should be assured.

"If people think the mere presence of firearms is evil then America has lost its way. I own firearms and kept them in my dorm room [at Ouchita Baptist University in Arkadelphia Ark.] for hunting purposes.”

Gov. Mary Fallin has yet to take a stand either way on the bill.

In an e-mail, Alex Weintz, Fallin’s communications director said, “Gov. Fallin is waiting to review what legislation, if any, makes it to her desk before offering a commitment.

She is, however, a strong supporter of 2nd Amendment rights and supports the principle behind open carry.”

Jerry Steward, OCCC executive vice president, said he thinks about the safety of OCCC students, faculty, and staff every day but doesn’t agree with SB 858.

He said OCCC leadership has consistently stated there is no evidence that having people carrying guns on campus makes the general population safer.

"It has been the consistent position of the leadership of this institution,” he said.

"It is the constant position of the leadership of every other public institution of higher education in Oklahoma. It has been the consistent position of the state regents and the Chancellor (of Higher Education) Glen Johnson. It continues to be our position.”

Steward said he has spoken with numerous legislators over the years, talking to them about concealed weapons on campuses and OCCC’s position on them.

“Everyone recognizes this isn’t a perfect world and we cannot absolutely guarantee everyone’s safety but we need to do everything we can to make sure people on campus are safe.”

“We believe they will not make us safer, (and) will make us less safe if we have people carrying guns,” he said.

Steward said he knows the bill has many supporters and, as a result, the bill will continue to be pushed.

“Would anticipate the individuals who believe otherwise and even those individuals who are trying to have weapons allowed on our campuses will continue to pursue their belief (that) it’s better for us to have people allowed to have guns concealed or open.”

Steward said regardless of which position is taken, it’s important for everyone to contact their senator or representative to voice their opinions on weapons bills.

“If you’re opposed to having guns on campus or if you’re for it, contact your senator, contact your house representative, and let them know how you feel,” he said.

“Whether it’s pro or con, don’t sit quietly and assume it will all work out OK.”

HOUSE BILL 1419 CAUSED ALARM FOR EMERGENCY WORKERS

EMS students converge on state capitol

JOHN ABSTON
News Writing Student

Emergency Medical Sciences students from OCCC learned the value of communicating with the State Legislature this semester. A bill that would have replaced some EMS workers on ambulance crews failed to win legislative approval this session after the students voiced their concerns to lawmakers in March.

About 50 OCCC students went to the state Capitol to speak to lawmakers about House Bill 1419 that would have allowed a registered nurse to replace an EMS worker on a two-person ambulance team.

Program Director Leaugay Barnes said she took a personal leave day to accompany the students.

Barnes said some aspects of House Bill 1419 caused her concern, particularly since EMS paramedics are paid much less than registered nurses. She said she feared that nurses could be less effective than paramedics in some emergency situations.

"Nurses are trained and educated on a broad range of subjects," Barnes said. “They have a wide but comparatively non-specific instruction.

"EMS students receive training that is custom fit for the autonomous rigors of the first responder experience.”

Barnes said she took the students to the Legislature because EMS workers are not as adept as other groups at making their voices heard with lawmakers.

Because EMS teams work in twos, it is less likely they would gather in numbers to discuss their needs and then act collectively, she said. A nurse or firefighter is surrounded by co-workers every day. They are more likely to organize and speak as one, Barnes said.

Ambulance teams respond to everything from gunshot wounds to slips and falls, she said. They are the first medically licensed help to see an individual in an emergency.

“EMS responders operate under a supervising physician’s license,” Barnes said.

Consider that your back-up is a phone call away rather than in the next room, she said. This is only one of the challenges unique to EMS training.

Also significant is the fact that an injured individual in a rural or remote location, such as any point along Interstate-44, could wait 30 minutes for medical treatment.

In these very critical first 30 minutes, Barnes said, the injury could quickly become a fatality. This is why it is necessary that specifically trained first responder paramedics be required for EMS service, she said.

House Bill 1419 was sponsored by Rep. Dennis Casey (R-Morrison) and state Sen. Bryce Marlatt (R-Woodward).

Casey and Marlatt said they believed this bill would have increased the overall number of available paramedic caregivers, which in turn would increase the deliverance of care to those outside of the hospital setting.

House Bill 1419 was geared to benefit rural areas.

Casey’s district contains four counties directly north of Oklahoma City on the Oklahoma-Kansas border.

Marlatt’s district includes the Panhandle plus a few other northwestern counties.

Increasing the number of available and properly qualified first responders should be the goal, Barnes said, but the legislation would have done nothing to address this issue. This was one of the problems Barnes had with this proposed legislation.

She said OCCC is one of the top eight EMS programs in the nation.

“We are helping to shape the future of paramedic certification,” Barnes said.

She holds a master’s degree and has 20 years of EMS experience, and 13 years as a Flight Paramedic.
VOICE OF KKNG SAYS HARD WORK AND GOOD ATTITUDE PAY OFF

Student works dream job while attending OCCC

“I am not a cowboy cause I can't rope and ride. I can ride but I can’t rope,” Owen Pickard said. Pickard, 19, is the disc jockey for KKNG country from 2 to 7 p.m. weekdays.

Rummaging through his grandparents’ closet, Pickard stumbled across a black-and-white photo of his dad working as a college disc jockey for KGOU, and said he thought, “I would like to do that.”

Pickard said it all started as an English assignment his junior year at Moore High School. He called KKNG country and asked if he could shadow one of the disc jockeys for about an hour, and ended up staying the remainder of the day.

Pickard said he apparently made a great first impression and was given the opportunity to return the following summer.

During his junior year of high school, Pickard became a country music performer, playing at the Rodeo Opry in Oklahoma City. Not long after, he and his parents moved to Nashville.

This is where Pickard got his start performing at a local joint called Tootsie’s Orchid Lounge off the Broadway strip in Nashville. “I mainly played for tips and food,” Pickard said.

Family, a cheaper education, and a girlfriend ultimately brought Pickard back to Oklahoma after a short stint in Tennessee.

When he returned, he continued to work for the station he loves. Pickard said he has been a part of the KKNG family since 2008 and hopes to be there long into the future.

“I look forward to going on the air,” he said. “It is always exciting.”

Before going on air Pickard said he thinks to himself, “Let’s pump these people up, not like Richard Simmons but country style with less spandex.”

Pickard said the 3, 4, and 5 p.m. hours are mostly live, while the 2 and 6 p.m. hours are mostly recordings unless breaking news occurs.

OCCC broadcasting major Owen Pickard goes live on the air at 97.3 King Country April 18. Pickard joined Tyler Media in 2008 and works part time while finishing his degree.

The traditional ceremony starts at 6 p.m and the Career Ladder Pathway ceremony starts at 7:30 p.m in the dining area of the Student Union.

In the past, male nursing students would receive a stripe on their shirt, while the females would receive hats. Walker said the pin is a more unisex symbol for a more modern ceremony.

The pin is symbolic of the momentous achievement, she said.

Second semester nursing student Holly Hudson believes the pinning ceremony is special for students because it’s not only a graduation but also a success acknowledgement.

“I can’t wait for the day I’m pinned,” Hudson said.

OCCC ranks among the national leaders in its pass rate for the program, nursing professor Kay Wetmore said.

The nursing program class consists of a 9-credit-hour course per semester, Wetmore said, but students may spend up to 23 hours or more weekly of just hands-on time, not including studying.

“Being a former student of this program, it is exciting to watch students receiving their pins,” Wetmore said.

Walker agreed, saying it’s a great feat for nursing students because, upon completion, they are eligible to work in the real world or pursue further education in the same field.

“It could be considered a steppingstone toward advanced degrees.”

First Responder Day leaves lasting impressions

ew technology to alert stu-dents of an emergency on campus was introduced on First Responder Day April 20 in parking lot A near the library.

“The event served as a meet-and-greet for students and the first responder community,” said Dave Anderson, Information Technology and Infrastructure director at OCCC.

Anderson was at the event to introduce computer software that would cut into a student’s computer and alert the student in case of an emergency on campus. The program is provided by Alertus through grant money, Anderson said.

“It would alert the student in case of a fire, severe weather threatening OCC or any security issue.”

He said the system should be up and running by fall semester.

For the Oklahoma City Police Department, the event created a recruit-ment opportunity, said J. Latta, OCPD officer and recruiter.

“The OCPD hopes to recruit 50 new recruits by September 2011,” Latta said.

“A college degree increases the likelihood of acceptance to the program, as well as military experience, but neither is necessary. We are here to meet the students and say hello.

“Also there’s a squad car, the bomb squad and a police surveillance helicopter here on display.”

Lt. Charles Avery from the Oklahoma County Sheriff’s Department also was representing local law enforce-ment. Avery said he too, was there for recruitment pur-poses, and like the police department, was there to display some of the technology his department employs.

“We’ve got one of our fully loaded Ford Mustang units here to break the ice with the students, but our high-speed unit is a Dodge Challenger,” Avery said. “The Mustang draws in the attention, but the Challenger actually chases offenders.”

Avery, a Cameron University Business Administration graduate, said he started with the department when he was 23 as a traffic officer.

Now 33, Cameron said he has reached his current position with some diligent hard work.

“There is a tremendous amount of room for advancement for any hard-working go-getter,” he said.

“Anyone with a sound work ethic can advance in the department.”

The local ambulance service, EMSA, was represented by Raymond Farrow. A graduate of Martin Community College in Kansas, Farrow said he has been an EMSA paramedic since 2001.

“I love my job,” Farrow said.

He said he likes the constant activity of moving quickly from call to call. Farrow said EMSA was there to display the equipment he uses on a daily basis.

The event satisfied an Occupational Safety and Health Administration requirement for safety training for college employees, said Roger Owen of the Oklahoma City Fire Department.

“They can come out here, have the necessary paperwork signed by the exhibitors and avoid sitting through a more mundane meeting,” Owen said.

“This setting is far more hands-on than a certification in a classroom setting.”

Jennifer Hurt, pre-nursing student, said First Responder Day was inter-esting.

“The inside of the EMSA ambulance is fascinating, and the mobile command unit is enormous,” she said. Hurt also was impressed by Air One, the Oklahoma Highway Patrol helicopter.

On a rainy afternoon in the OCCC gym on April 27, Laser Tag stormed onto the scene in full force.

Mobile Laser Forces sponsored the event, and provided the weapons and obstacle course.

“This is the first time that OCCC (has had) Laser Tag as an Intramural sport and I’m really excited with the turnout,” said Eric Watson, Recreation and Sports specialist.

Nine squads consisting of five members per team competed in the occasion.

Team OCCC1 dominated Ginyu Force in a professional fashion during the first round 5-0.

“I have played Laser Tag a couple times and I can’t wait to play again,” OCCC1 team member Ryan Campbell said.

Pathways High School student Sean Phillips played for the second place Power Rangers.

“It was really fun,” Phillips said. “I really enjoyed dominating.”

Overall champions Testosterone escaped with a win by the skin of their nose.

The final match came down to two members of Testosterone attacking one member of the Power Rangers.

“One false move, and Testosterone claimed victory. "Being quick and fast were keys to victory for us today," said Devin Thompson, Testosterone team member. "Staying agile, mobile and hostile definitely helped our team declare victory today.”

“I believe this new addition to intramural sports will have a bright future here on campus," Watson said.

The champions were presented with Intramural League Champion shirts and bragging rights until next spring.

Security receives reports of solicitors, stolen tools

JEREMY CLOUD
Senior Writer
seniorwriter@occc.edu

OCCC Security officers were kept busy the last two weeks handling everything from solicitors on campus to damage from the recent high winds.

At 5:37 p.m., April 19, Officer Brandon Wheeler responded to a report of a man soliciting in the plaza.

When approached, Martin Grey, 24, gave a church ID card to Wheeler and told the officer that he was the only identification he had on him. Grey was escorted to the security office and Oklahoma City Police were called.

On arriving, the police told Wheeler that they were unable to take any action other than to ask Grey to leave the campus. Grey was informed that soliciting is not allowed on campus and he left of his own accord.

At 3:10 p.m., April 17, Officer Jeffrey Porter noted wind damage at the John Massey Center while on routine patrol.

The north side of the fence around the propane tanks and generator had blown down. Porter contacted Sgt. Kevin Tipton to make sure the damage was to OCCC property. Tipton wasn’t sure, but advised him to file a report anyway.

Review of the Massey Center’s cameras did not reveal when the damage had occurred.

Pictures were taken, and a report was filed.

Finally, at 8:23 a.m., April 20 Officer Jacob Roby responded to a report of missing tools in the Aquatic Center. Darren Cook, 41, a Facilities Management employee, reported tools were missing from his work area in the Chemical room there.

The tools, a multimeter, screwdriver bit set, and a screwdriver with bits attached, were last seen around April 4. Cook said he first noticed the tools missing April 19.

The missing tools are valued collectively at $501.

To report a crime on campus, call 405-682-1611, ext. 7691.

Lundy: Remembered as a ‘caring man’

She said it is that thoughtful passion she will miss the most.

“I always loved seeing his friendly face,” Wise said.

“He was so helpful. He wanted to help everyone, whether it was by bandaging a knee or unlocking a locked car.”

Another friend Lori Lowe, Shipping and Receiving clerk, said she witnessed that kindness firsthand over the 12 years she worked with Lundy.

“He was a very caring man,” Lowe said. “There were times when I was down on my luck and unable to have lunch, and he would call me up to make sure I had enough to eat.”

She said Lundy was like an uncle to her.

“If I was having a bad day, he was able to tell. He would always fix me up.

“He wasn’t judgmental, he wasn’t critical,” Lowe said. “Everybody was his friend.”

Former OCCC student Chelsea Cisneros said talking with Lundy was always a pleasure. “When I worked at the Math Lab and people forgot their belongings, I’d take them down to the security office,” Cisneros said.

“It was as though he had a rule not to let people leave without a smile on their face.”

Funeral services for Lundy are to be held at 10:30 a.m. Saturday, April 30, at Draper Park Christian Church at 8500 S. Walker in Oklahoma City. Rev. Ted Conway will officiate. Interment will follow at Union City Cemetery in Union City.

Survivors include his wife, Debra Lundy; son, Timothy; daughter, Jennifer; father, Paul; and two brothers, Jerry and Joey. He was preceded in death by his mother.

Students in English Professor Stephen Morrow’s classes learn the importance of respect for everyone’s opinion right from the start.

Morrow said he believes philosophy goes beyond words and should be converted into actions.

The way he handles his classrooms is one way in which Morrow shows his caring personality.

“All of my classrooms are cooperative settings,” Morrow said. “When someone talks, everyone listens.”

He said it is important that his classroom be a place where students feel safe to voice their opinions and learn more about themselves.

Creating this environment is a product of extensive training which he said, will continue at an even higher level.

Recently Morrow learned he is going to be the first trained Parker Palmer Circle of Trust facilitator on campus. Morrow was chosen from applicants from the U.S. and Canada to be on a team of 16 for the 2011 and 2012 Team for Courage and Renewal.

The Circles of Trust are a part of the Parker Palmer Institute’s efforts to help people find their inner voice and be able to speak with it honestly, Morrow said.

“The Circle of Trust is meant to help professionals find strength, integrity and the voice of their best selves and bring that into the workplace,” Morrow said. “These circles are a safe place to be.”

Morrow said he has attended several of the Parker Palmer retreats and has seen the difference that made in his life.

“I have found a connection and a purpose,” Morrow said. “I want to bring that back to our campus, to our students, and to my colleagues.”

Parker Palmer started by helping educators to be their truest selves in the classroom in order to have the healthiest working environment for students, Morrow said. He is hoping to do the same.

It has been quite the journey for Morrow to reach where he is today on the Team for Courage and Renewal, and it has just begun.

“To apply, I had to do two years of Courage and Renewal retreats in North Texas,” Morrow said.

Applicants were not selected solely because they had attended retreats.

“Palmer is very selective in who he lets lead a Circle of Trust because it is the work of souls,” Morrow said.

Being chosen to be a facilitator for a Circle of Trust is an honor that Morrow treasures. “I feel like the luckiest person in the world.”

Over the next two years Morrow, along with his 15 teammates, will complete more training involving retreats and extensive homework.

This educator will be getting his own education from one of his heroes.

In 2013, when Morrow has finished his training with Parker Palmer, he will start his work by setting up Circles of Trust with faculty, then students.

Choirs preparing for musical performance

JESSE HIGH

Choral composer Joseph Martin will work with OCCC’s three choruses on campus before they perform some of his music in concert at 7 p.m.

Friday, May 6, at the Wilmont Baptist Church, 6400 S Santa Fe in Oklahoma City.

Martin is a music industry professional based in Austin, Texas, whose work includes both sacred and secular themes, according to his website www.martin88.com.

Martin’s pieces on the program include “The Awakening” and “The Invitation,” said music professor Ron Staton, who directs OCCC’s choral music program.

Martin, known for his choral compositions such as “Canticum of Hope” and “A Noble Theme,” will speak to music students from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and then again at 6:30 p.m. Thursday, May 5, in room 132 in the VPAC building.

“He will speak to the students about how to get in the business, composing, recording, how to get music published, and just touch on the business side of making music,” Staton said.

Staton said they are expecting big numbers at their concert, which is why they perform off campus.

“We have at least 500 people show up to our shows,” Staton said. “The school’s auditorium only holds 280.”

The choral department is comprised of three different choir groups.

The Concert Choir is open enrollment for any student and currently has 33 voices.

The Chamber Singers also is made up of students, but this group requires an audition.

“But it is also one of the choir groups that allows students to get tuition fee waivers,” Staton said.

The largest group is the Symphonic Community Choir, Staton said.

It has about 75 members consisting of college students, teenagers, and others from the community.

“The difference between the Concert choir and the Symphonic is the Symphonic involves people who are interested in choir, but may not be working on a college degree,” Staton said.

“The youngest in the community choir would be 16 and the oldest 84,” Staton said.

There are no prerequisites for the Symphonic Community Choir and Concert Choir, Staton said.

Victoria Hzboun, an OCCC music student in Concert Choir, said the vocalists in the different choirs become attached to one another.

“You learn a lot of things you never would have on your own. And our concerts are really fun.”

Jazz band teams with Grammy winner for May 4 campus concert

OCCC’s jazz bands will be performing “Precious,” a single from Esperanza Spalding’s latest album, in a free concert at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, May 4, in the Bruce Owen Theater on campus, said David Traxler, jazz band drummer. Spalding is this year’s Grammy Award Winner for best new artist.

Traxler said he and other jazz fans were surprised when Spalding won the Grammy because she is not as popular as Justin Bieber, who also was nominated for the same award. It is unusual for a jazz musician to receive such recognition.

“Precious” will be one of many tunes on tap for the night of soulful jazz and rhythm-and-blues music, Traxler said.

Ryan Edward Miller, bass guitarist for the band, said he is excited about the concert.

“I am looking forward to this upcoming night of fun through music,” the music major said at rehearsal recently.

The nine-member band is comprised of two groups of jazz musicians who will share the stage. One group practices on Tuesday afternoons and the other practices on Wednesday afternoons. They have been preparing since spring break for the performance, Traxler said.

Traxler is the only one who has been in the band for more than three years. He said he will be graduating this spring, with a degree in Diversified Studies with a music emphasis.

Music Professor Michael Boyle composed one the songs for the night, Traxler said.

“He wrote the song for me since I will be graduating this semester,” he said. “The jazz music concert is an avenue for us to show what we have been working on for the past few weeks.”

Boyle said the jazz bands were created for students and have been doing concerts on campus, usually twice per semester, since 2006.

Boyle is the band director and plays the keyboard during rehearsals. His expertise in music was felt when the band rehearsed one of the songs to be performed during the concert, Roberta Flack’s hit single, “Killing Me Softly with His Song.”

Other members of the jazz bands are Brittany Foos and Zach Lebo, bass guitar; Jose Gabaldon, electric guitar; Paul Collins, saxophone; Brittney Ragland and Victoria Hzboun, vocals; and Charlie Williams, drums.

The bands are open to all students who are interested, and musicians do not have to be music majors, Boyle said.

For more information concerning the jazz bands, contact Boyle by e-mail mboyle@occc.edu.
