Some college records public

Crime reports, employee resumes can be requested

Most students probably are unaware of campus police records that should be readily available to them.

As a college, OCCC is required to abide by the Clery Act as a part of the Higher Education Act of 1965. It is a federal law that requires colleges and universities to disclose certain timely and annual information about campus crime and security policies, according to the website www.securityoncampus.org.

In short: Anyone should be able to stroll into OCCC's security office and request information about a crime and receive it in a timely manner. Institutions must also make timely warnings to the people on campus about crimes that pose an ongoing threat to students and employees.

To get this information, it is important that students file correct documentation of a public record properly and get it in the right hands.

Former Pioneer Editor Joey Stipek said the Pioneer staff has encountered a few issues collecting data, specifically the crime reports in the spring of 2011.

"I recall that the Pioneer staff had difficulty obtaining crime reports at certain times," Stipek said.

He also said the Pioneer had several problems obtaining the crime reports from Media Relations Coordinator Cordell Jordan.

"Sue Hinton and I sat down with Cordell Jordan and Chief James Fitzpatrick," Stipek said.

"At the time they explained that the department was undergoing a transition, and this wouldn't become a common problem," Stipek said.

There are many different definitions of "timely," and it can be situational, Jordan said.

OKLAHOMA CONSIDERED CROSSROADS FOR SEX SLAVERY

Human sex trafficking state issue

MORGAN BEARD

In 2009, the U.S. Department of Justice reported America is now the prime destination for human sex trafficking. Due to Oklahoma's central geographic location and major highways such as Interstate 35 and Interstate 40, the state as a whole acts as major transportation routes for one of the world's fastest growing issues.

Roksana Alavi, an anti-human trafficking speaker and OCCC adjunct philosophy professor, recently held a presentation discussing the problem of modern-day sex slavery for students and faculty of the college.

"Human sex trafficking is defined as the harboring, transportation, or obtaining of a person for the purpose of a commercial sex act," Alavi said.

Alavi emphasized the issue of awareness regarding human sex trafficking stating that the majority of people aren't aware of the severity of the problem.

According to FBI estimates, there are more than 100,000 victims of sex trafficking in the United States alone. Most victims are minors ranging from 9 to 19 years old who come from broken homes, Alavi said.

Young girls who grow up in poverty, single-parent households or in an alcohol- or drug-addictive family are most at risk. Mark Elam, co-founder of the Oklahomans Against Trafficking of Humans Coalition, said Oklahoma is a prime location for potential targets.

"Oklahoma ranks highly in domestic violence, poverty and child abuse among other things," Elam said. "That creates a desperate, vulnerable population that traffickers aim for."

OPINION

EDITORIAL | Students are forced to choose between money for books or using them to study for finals

Book buyback schedule unfair

The end of another semester is drawing near, and through all the stress of cramming for last-minute projects and finals, one glimmer of hope remains for students: book buyback.

Whitney Knight

Yes, it's that glorious time of year where students can hurl their cursed textbooks at a smiling bookstore employee and then gleefully turn tail, knowing that they will never see that bloody algebra book again.

But it gets even better: Not only do you rid yourself of your semester-long burdens, you get paid to do so. What could be better than that?

Unfortunately, there is a catch.

Currently, textbook buyback begins during the last week of classes.

That means bright and early on Monday morning, dozens of students will be clamoring to line up in front of the bookstore window, wanting to make sure they sell their books before the bookstore receives too many and can't take anymore.

Although many professors might no longer be lecturing from books at this time, some might be. And even if they aren't, students might appreciate being able to study from their textbooks before their big final.

This presents students with a dilemma: sell back fast and get cash, or hang onto the book a little longer and hope the bookstore can still take it when they're done using it?

The current system is simply unfair.

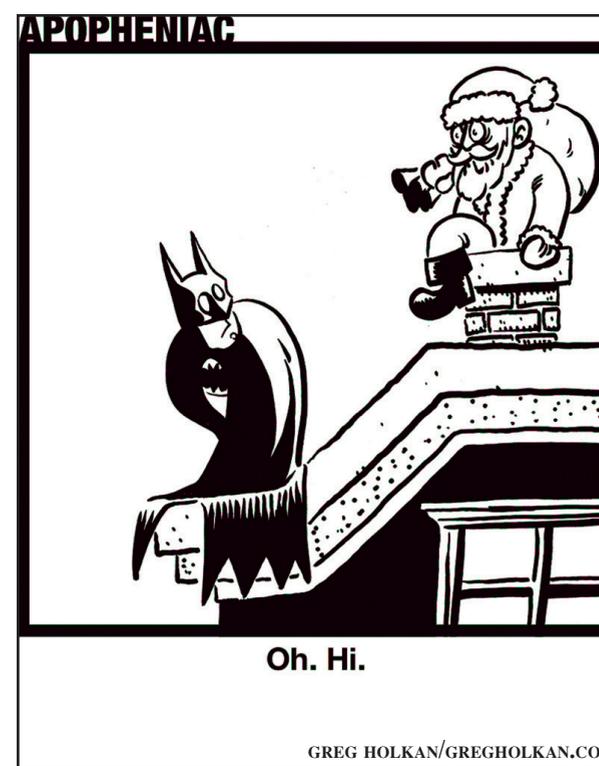

It is unfair that students who have a Monday morning class might get money for their books, while ones with a Friday evening class might not.

It is unfair that a student might have to pick between an extra night of studying and a few extra dollars to put towards new textbooks next year.

OCCC needs to do something about this system. It would make more sense if book buyback were held at the very end of finals week, or even pushed to the week after.

This would level the playing field and make the buyback period a fair game for everyone.

Students could decide when they wanted to go in to sell their books, not be forced to choose between studying and getting some extra cash.

The college makes a habit of telling us we are in it for ourselves — it's about time they get in it for us.

DANCE PROGRAM DESIGNER | Wide range of dance classes available to students in Spring 2012

Theatrical dance class coming to OCCC campus

To the editor:

Theatrical Dance is coming to the OCCC campus through a three-pronged curriculum offering dance technique classes, a student performing company and a general education humanities course, Understanding Dance.

The dance technique class initiates the plan beginning spring semester. Theatrical Dance technique classes will be offered from 3 to 4:20 p.m. Monday and Wednesday, through the Recreation and Fitness Department. Utilizing elements of jazz, ballet and modern dance, the class will offer options to accommodate beginning through advanced dancers.

Tights and leotards or stretchy, close-fitting attire is required, as well as ballet or jazz shoes, dance paws, or dance sneakers.

Athletic shoes are not allowed due to the risk of knee injuries during spinning turns. Bare feet are also allowed, but not suggested.

Designed to burn fat and increase core strength, coordination and flexibility, the class will be included in the department's unlimited class package. However, class size is limited.

The dance technique class will be required for students selected for the performing company.

The troupe will perform initially for a dansical project utilizing elements of not only concert dance, but also historical social dance.

The dance company will be formed in March. More information will be forthcoming.

Understanding Dance will be offered for general education humanities credit beginning in the Fall 2012 semester.

The course is designed to give students an understanding and appreciation of dance as theatre art.

Learning objectives include understanding the role and importance of dance in culture and society, the historical development of dance as theatre art, aspects of various theatrical dance styles, and the art of making dances.

For more information, contact Recreation and Fitness at 405-682-7860.

COMMENTS AND REVIEWS

CONCERT PREVIEW | Left To Die to play local concert in December

Local metal band seems more like family

GINNIE P. ESCOBEDO
Guest Writer

“Family” isn’t a word often used to describe a metal band, but for local band Left to Die it seems to be what set them apart from other bands.

Formed in 2009, not a young band but fairly new, Left To Die took Oklahoma by storm sharing the stage with many well known rock/heavy metal artists such as Texas Hippie Coalition, Faster Pussycat, Death Angel, Alien Ant Farm and many more.

Originally, Jeremy Waller (lead vocals and rhythm guitar) and his brother Jason Waller (vocals and bass guitar) started out playing covers ranging from Billy Idol to Motley Crue, the heroes that they grew up with.

“We had fun playing our favorite tunes but we were never really good at playing someone else’s material, so we started writing our own. We were both in the school band and choir so it came as a second nature,” Jeremy Waller said.

After losing two members of the band the Waller brothers met up with two old friends, Tony Bucher (drums) and George Wilkes (lead guitar).

“We have known Tony for 20 years and he has been in some of OKC’s founding hardcore metal bands such as Hate&Agony,” Waller said. “After a while, he wanted to join a band that was more like family so he hooked up with my brother and me.”

Wilkes agreed.

“I was playing in band like 808, Apollolon and

A Strand Of Fate, which I still play for, but I was wanting something that felt more like a family than a business and that is when I found Jeremy, Jason and Tony,” Wilkes said.

The four grew up in the ‘80s watching MTV and buying records, but everything changed in 1990 when they saw Pantera play a little club in Bricktown called KINETiX.

“After that show we all went home and took down our poser posters, and the metal really began to take charge in our music and our lives,” Waller said.

“Even though we have a dark and heavy side, we still consider ourselves more hard rock than straight metal, using our background in classical, classic rock and blues to enhance our hard rock/metal sound.”

As with most bands in the music industry, taking the stage and sending a message to the fans could be both a thrill and a drug.

“I believe in fate. Sometime when we are killing it on stage and I look around at who I am playing with and how the crowd is doing I feel like we were all meant to be doing this,” Waller said.

“Of course with anything that is good, it is very addictive. If we as a band go too long without playing live, we get a little crazy,” Bucher said.

Jeremy “Gutter” Wise, the roadie for Left to Die, has worked with the Waller brothers for 16 years.

“I love what I do, I bleed for what I do and I will continue doing it for as long as the Waller brothers continue to play,” Wise said.

“We try to connect with every person we can. It doesn’t matter if it’s 10 or 1000, we play like it’s our last stand,” Waller said.

Left To Die will be performing at 9 p.m. Saturday, Dec. 17 at the Thirsty Hog Saloon located at 720 South MacArthur Blvd. in Oklahoma City. The Thirsty Hog is 21 to enter and will be charging $5 at the door. Beer will be free.

Arrowhead Stadium hits target for fan experience

The Kansas City Chiefs warm up pre-game anthem “We Ready” blared through the speakers at Arrowhead Stadium during a cold November Sunday evening, but the Chiefs were anything but ready as the Pittsburgh Steelers defense took advantage of Chiefs’ back-up quarterback Tyler Palko’s four interceptions in a 13-9 Steelers victory.

Arrowhead Stadium is also considered the loudest place to play football in the NFL as the Chiefs proudly boast on their video screens before the game, and it was when Tyler Palko was in the game at quarterback; however, the crowd noise wasn’t all positive.

With injuries to Chiefs starting QB Matt Cassel, running back Jamaal Charles, and safety Eric Berry, the Chiefs need consistency from Palko.

Palko fumbled the ball once due to a mistimed snap and threw for three interceptions during the game.

Palko could have easily thrown another 10 interceptions during the course of the game.

Many of the Chiefs fans in attendance showered Palko with a chorus of boos and started a loud chant for third-string quarterback Ricky Stanzi, the Chiefs fifth round pick from the Chiefs 2011 NFL draft.

Poor quarterback play wasn’t limited to just the Chiefs, Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger struggled against the Chiefs defense.

Roethlisberger finished 21-31 for 193 yards with a single touchdown and one interception. Roethlisberger’s touchdown was the only one thrown during the game.

After the game, Roethlisberger told the media he blamed his struggles against the Chiefs on a broken thumb caused in a previous game against the Cincinnati Bengals.

game early in the first quarter due to injury after he banged his head against the knee of Chiefs offense tackle Steve Maneri.

Even with Polamalu out of the game, the Steelers had no problem containing the Chiefs offense.

The stadium where the Chiefs play, Arrowhead Stadium, recently has undergone renovations to the cost $375 million to upgrade the facilities to compete with more modern NFL stadiums such as the new Giants Stadium and the new Texas Stadium where the Dallas Cowboys play.

With an added emphasis on video screens, club suites, restaurants and seating, Arrowhead stadium should be considered again among the premier stadiums in the NFL.

Overall the experience at Arrowhead was excellent. Parking and exiting the stadium were a lot easier than I was anticipating without any lines at all. There were plenty of food options to choose from such as Kansas City barbecue to sushi to your favorite adult beverage. Everything was reasonably priced compared to most sporting events where it will cost you an arm or a leg.

Even though I’m a Steelers fan, Chiefs fans are a rabid diehard fan base that live and die by their team.

The majority I encountered were friendly and upbeat about their team despite the struggles of the Chiefs’ season.

The final play of the game was decided on an interception by Steelers cornerback Keenan Lewis originally intended for wide receiver Dwayne Bowe with 46 seconds left in the fourth quarter.

Coupled with an awesome fan experience while attending the game, anytime you can witness a defensive football battle where the game is decided on the final play, it makes for an exciting time.

SERVICE DOGS HELP THOSE WHO NEED IT

Mans best friend in service of others

SARAH MUKIRI

News Writing Student

Jenny entered the room groomed to perfection, with painted nails and a beautiful golden fur coat.

Her traveling companion, Susan Hartman, was clad in a sky blue dress shirt, gray pants and black shoes. Hartman is the executive director of Therapeutics Service Dogs of Oklahoma, the only certified service-dog training agency in the state.

Jenny is a golden Labrador retriever who sat down next to Hartman and quietly surveyed her environment while Hartman spoke. Hartman, and Jenny were guests in Professor Gwin Faulconer-Lippert's Public Relations class recently.

Hartman explained that her organization is responsible for scouting for pups, training them and certifying them as service dogs. Therapeutics Service Dogs of Oklahoma is a statewide organization based in Tulsa that has been in operation since 1992.

Hartman said there are different types of service dogs.

For example, there are medical dogs that respond to an individual having a seizure or an individual who is in distress due to a diabetic condition.

She also mentioned hearing dogs that are capable of guiding individuals who are either completely deaf or hard of hearing.

She also explained that there are service dogs that react to psychiatric distress, such as an individual who has a mental condition, including Post Traumatic Stress Disorder.

She explained that these psychiatric alert dogs are capable of walking into a dark room and putting the lights on, waking someone up who is experiencing a nightmare or even running to get help.

Perhaps best known, Hartman said, are the mobility assistance dogs that help individuals get around, such as crossing the road.

It all begins with choosing the right dogs. The process of puppy selection is rigorous, Hartman said, and she only accepts puppies from select kennels for training. She also said she takes in puppies when they are two months old and the training starts immediately.

These dogs are in the training program for two years and are evaluated every six months.

Training begins with basic obedience.

"The dogs are trained not to be aggressive or protective, but to become a friend," she said.

Hartman mentioned that some of her clients have benefited from this aspect of the program because their service dogs have helped them to connect better with humans.

Her clients have said: "My dog opens the door for me both physically and figuratively."

There are unique models in service-dog training. She said that the dogs live with volunteers for two years while in training.

This reduces the cost of training considerably. On average, she said, they can spend about $25,000 to $40,000 just to train and keep the dog in the facility.

"The volunteer keeps this figure way below that," Hartman said.

The volunteer and the trainers meet at least twice a week to check on the progress of the dogs in training.

When it becomes apparent that a dog will not be able to perform the service it is being trained for, Hartman said, it is not termed a failure but a "career-change dog."

For example, some dogs can

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF

be trained to be mobility dogs but if it happens that they are afraid of vehicles in the streets or just being out in the open, they may do very well in sensing psychiatric distress on the part of the client.

To qualify for a service dog, a client must demonstrate how the dog will impact his or her life in a positive manner.

Every year, 10 dogs are ready for placement. She also said that on average 25 applications are made.

She said that most important consideration for anyone looking for a service dog is the ability to afford that dog.

"These dogs need food, shelter, medical care and grooming," Hartman said.

"You also need to show the ability to be the leader in this team of the dog and you.

"If you do not want the dog to engage in certain behavior, then you have to reinforce this from the onset."

Hartman kept dog-loving students at a distance, explaining that service dogs are not meant to be petted as this distracts them. But she let Jenny do some tricks to the delight of students and teacher alike.

Jenny can open and close a door using her nose and paws. She can also turn the lights on and off in a room. She is also capable of picking up keys and handing them to someone if they drop them.

Jenny can also do the laundry, by loading and unloading clothes from a side-load washer and dryer.

For more information about the Therapeutics Organization you can contact Susan Hartman by phone at 918-270-4226 or by email at shartman@therapeutics.org. You can also visit the website at <http://www.therapeutics.org>, to receive valuable information about volunteering with service dogs, upcoming events, and even to apply for a service dog.

Emergency preparedness classes on campus

In a state where tornadoes are routine and earthquakes are an occasional event, people need to know how to prepare for an emergency.

“Unfortunately, many people don’t,” said Lisa Teel, OCCC’s director of emergency planning and risk management.

The Community College Citizen Preparedness Program is a national program aimed at training citizens through 125 community colleges on specific protective actions that, following a disaster, help save lives and reduce injuries before first response teams arrive.

Emergency situations to prepare for include terrorist threats or attacks, technological problems like power outages, and natural disasters like floods, tornados, ice storms, and earthquakes.

In light of recent earthquakes, Penny Hampton, director of professional development, said people are advised by the American Red Cross to drop, cover, and hold under a sturdy table or structure.

Teel recommends having a three-day survival kit for your home. The kit should contain a radio, clean water, non-perishable foods, a blanket, a flashlight, and toilet paper along with anything else you think you may need while waiting out the disaster in your home. Teel also said people should keep a utility shut-off tool in the survival kit, because the gas or water lines may need to be shut off in some situations.

She also said to have a “grab and go” kit in case your home has to be evacuated. This kit should include clothes, medications, toiletries, snacks, a cell phone charger, a flash drive containing pictures, and a written contact list with phone numbers and addresses.

Hampton said people with pets should have pet records in their “grab and go” kit, as that may be needed for admittance into an emergency shelter.

Teel said safety is no accident.

“Make a plan, get a kit, and be prepared.”

Future Community College Citizen Preparedness Program classes will be held Dec. 13 at 1 p.m. in room CU3.

College Democrats active club, leader says

TIM O’DONNELL
News Writing Student

OCCC’s College Democrats took politics from theory into practice this semester.

In October former president of the College Democrats, Kenneth Meador, ran for State Senate on the Democratic Party ticket for district 43. He lost in a special election on Oct. 11, but won nearly 40 percent of the total vote.

Since Oklahoma is widely known as a Republican state, when Meador ran, no one thought he had a fighting chance, said Javier Mabrey, current president of the College Democrats, who served as Meador’s deputy field director during his campaign.

Mabrey said the race was a toss-up to the very end. In his mind, it was about as close to a victory as one could get.

Mabrey said this campaign really helped him as far as experience goes, toward his goal of going to law school.

Mabrey is a political science major who plans to graduate in the spring. He said he and other members of the College Democrats continue to keep this club one of the most active clubs on campus.

Mabrey said the College Democrats’ ideals are mainly inspired by the belief that government should be helping the middle class and working class more than the wealthy classes.

The College Democrats promote many different drives and seminars for students at OCCC, such as voter registration.

When that time of the year comes around, the College Democrats will help to set up booths around campus for people to register to vote.

They also will work for Democratic candidates.

Mabrey also said the club plans to hold an “Obamacare” seminar.

“This seminar is to basically help people to a better understanding of what Obamacare is all about,” Mabrey said.

The College Democrats also plan on attending Occupy OKC, a small spin-off of the current Occupy Wall Street, which is being held at Kerr Park in Oklahoma City.

Mabrey said he wants the College Democrats to “have solidarity with the people of Occupy OKC and to know that we are there for them and supporting them.”

They plan to bring food and drinks to the people protesting and also picket along with the protesters in an effort to help with the “Occupy Together” movement being held across the U.S., and specifically Occupy OKC, to show the 99 percent of Americans who are taking action against the 1 percent of “greedy” Americans.

There are many holiday activities offered in the metro area to suit the young and the young at heart.

Provided here is a partial list of activities offered in Oklahoma City and surrounding areas. For a complete list and schedule visit the website www.downtownindecember.com.

Chesapeake Snow Tubing: Great family fun at the Red Hawks Field at 2 South Mickey Mantle Drive. Session size is limited and operated on a first-come, first-serve basis. Admission is $10 per person for a 90-minute session. Go to www.downtownindecember.com for a list of operating times.

Devon Ice Rink: Ice skating for the whole family. The rink will be open noon to midnight, starting on Dec. 12. Admission is $10 per person with skate rental or $7 without. For more information, visit the website www.downtownindecember.com.

New Year's Eve: New Year's Eve offers big plans with Opening Night 2012 from 7 p.m. to midnight on Dec. 31 in downtown Oklahoma City. Opening Night is a New Year's Eve celebration with music, dancing, theater and fireworks! Admission wristbands are $8 in advance or $10 at the event. Children 5 and under are admitted free. The wristbands are valid for all Opening Night events.

If Christmas lights tickle your fancy around the holidays, here is a list of Christmas lights that will give a thrill to everyone. Visit www.downtownindecember.com to see the complete list of Christmas light displays in the downtown area.

Yukon's Christmas in the Park: Yukon's annual event offers a more than 3-mile drive through 100 acres along Jim Watson Drive with a display of more than 300 incredible Christmas lights, all from your car. Admission is free, but donations are accepted at the end of the drive-through.

The event runs through Dec. 31 in Yukon City Park from 6-11 p.m.

Chickasha Festival of Lights: Take the 45-minute drive south to Shannon Springs Park in Chickasha. The Chickasha Festival of Lights attracts visitors from all over the nation and includes an animated, musically choreographed show. Be ready for some long lines, though, because this is one of the best around. This free event runs to Dec. 31. Bus tours, carriage rides and photos with Santa available for a charge.

Guthrie's Annual Territorial Christmas: Guthrie celebrates Christmas in grand territorial style! The celebration boasts live performances, trolley tours by candlelight, and Victorian evening walks featuring live window scenes depicting life in Territorial Guthrie. Carolers, peanut vendors and lights galore illuminate the historic district. The festivities run until Christmas. For more information call 405-282-1947 or 800-299-1889.

Free Christmas Dinner: Not everyone has a home — or a meal — for the holidays. If you are looking for somewhere to get warm and enjoy a hearty Christmas meal, help is as close as a trip down to Norman. The dinner will be held from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Christmas Day at Norman High School, located at 911 W. Main Street. For more information or to volunteer or donate, call 405-364-3273.

More OCCC students and staff provided their favorite parts of the holiday season. OCCC theater major, Stewart Braud, said lights are his favorite part of the holidays.

"I like listening to the holiday music," said Tim Seals, literature major.

Stenography major, Kimberly Perez, goes to Mexico for Christmas with her family.

"My favorite part is being around family and the general atmosphere of the holidays," said Michael Cowan, theater major.

Angel Icenhour, business major and OCCC admissions services assistant said "putting up the Christmas tree after Thanksgiving dinner," is her favorite holiday tradition.

Hanukkah, also known as The Festival of Lights, is a Jewish holiday celebrated for eight days and nights. This year, Hanukkah starts at sundown, as all Jewish holidays do, on Dec. 20.

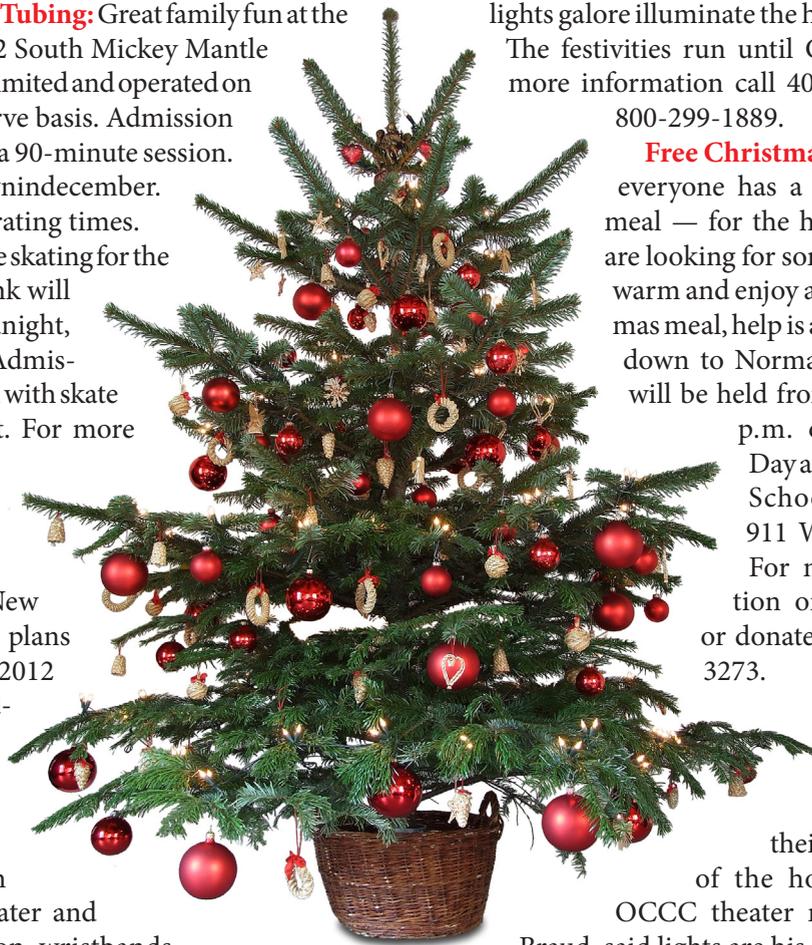

As an African American and Pan-African holiday celebrated by millions throughout the world African community, Kwanzaa brings a cultural message, which speaks to the best of what it means to be African and human in the fullest sense. This year, Kwanzaa is celebrated from Dec. 26 – Jan. 1.

Did you know?

Christianity and Christmas

- In the early Church, Christmas was not celebrated as a major feast. The first evidence of the Church attempting to put a date on the day of Christ's birth comes from 200 AD, when theologians in Alexandria decided it was May 20. By the 380s, the Church in Rome was attempting to unite the various regions in using Dec. 25 as the universal feast day, and eventually that is the day that stuck.
- The famous children's character Santa Claus is actually based on the early Church Bishop Saint Nicholas. He was born during the third century (around 270 AD), in the village of Patara in Turkey, and was known for secretly giving gifts of money to the poor. The modern image of him as a jolly man in red most likely comes from the 1823 poem "A Visit From St. Nicholas," also known as "The Night Before Christmas."
- In the late 1800s, a candy maker in Indiana wanted to express the meaning of Christmas through a symbol made of candy. He came up with the idea of bending candy sticks into the shape of a candy cane. He incorporated several symbols of Christ's love and sacrifice through the candy cane. First, he used a plain white peppermint stick, symbolizing the purity and sinless nature of Jesus. Next, he added three small stripes to symbolize the pain inflicted upon Jesus before his death. There are three of them to represent the Holy Trinity. He added a bold stripe to represent the blood Jesus shed. When looked at with the crook on top, it looks like a shepherd's staff because Jesus is the shepherd of man. If you turn it upside down, it becomes the letter J symbolizing the first letter in Jesus' name.

SPORTS | Chesapeake Elite Pro-Am pits professionals against amateurs in 3-day event

Swim pros to come to aquatic center

MATT WISSON
News Writing Student

Forty-four professional swimmers will share the pool with hundreds of amateurs Dec. 15 through 18 in the 20th annual Chesapeake Elite Pro-Am swim meet being held on the OCCC campus.

The Aquatic Center will host the event in which professionals and amateurs alike compete for money and prizes.

Among the professionals will be British record holder Simon Burnett, Kenyan Olympic finalist Jason Dunford, and Anthony Ervin, the first African American athlete on the U.S. Olympic Swimming Team.

"This is a tournament where people can come and watch a high level of competition they may not find anywhere else," said Pro Athlete liaison Krista Kezbers.

The tournament will have a full meet schedule in which amateurs from college and high school can compete against practiced professionals with Olympic résumés.

Kezbers said she has been part of this tournament since she was an amateur.

This is a tournament where people can come and watch a high level of competition they may not find anywhere else.”

Pro Athlete Liaison

Now that she races on the professional side, she can give good insight into what it is like to race for both.

"The biggest thing for the amateurs is competing against Olympic veterans and getting the experience of a big meet," Kezbers said.

"For the professionals it is all about showcasing your skills and winning some money while doing it.

"Professionals can win $1200 for winning their event, and up to $2200 if they can break any meet records," Kezbers said.

Unable to be paid in cash due to their classification as "amateurs," non-professional swimmers will race for prizes such as swim equipment and other items.

Roxy Butler, OCCC director of Recreation and Fitness, said that the college's facility suits the competition well.

"The Aquatic Center has been an excellent place to have this tournament over the past 20 years, as it was initially built for Olympic competition," Butler said.

"The Aquatic Center was actually built for the 1989 Olympic festival."

Kezbers said she loves competing in the Aquatic Center.

"It's the nicest swim facility in the state," she said.

"I can see how much work the school puts in to make this center a clean, nice place to swim every day."

Admission is free to all who want to watch the Pro-Am and see professionals and amateurs compete first hand.

The meet starts at 6 p.m. on Dec. 15 and ends at 4:30 p.m. on Dec. 18.

A full list of professional athletes as well as a list of events and start times can be found on the Chesapeake Swim Club website at www.chesapeakeswimclub.org.

specific time length for “timely.” However the Clery Act does.

Under the laws of the Clery Act, the report must be available in 48 hours, said Joey Senat, Oklahoma State University media and strategic communications professor

“The police department has to provide the information within two business days under the Clery Act,” said Joey Senat, Oklahoma State University professor.

“It shouldn’t take longer to provide incident reports under the Open Reords Act.”

The consequences of not complying with open records requirements can be a fine or prosecution, according to the website www.splc.org.

President Paul Sechrist said he is unaware of any time the college was not in compliance with either of the Acts.

“It is the practice of the college to comply fully with the requirements of the Open Records Act and the Clery Act,” Sechrist said.

Slavery: OKC third in state for child porn searches

Elam said sex trafficking rings implement recruiters to use tactics such as coercion and brainwashing upon children with limited options due to their unfortunate situation.

“They play games with the victims. They trick them, make them feel special, they wait to talk them out of their home with false promises of a better life,” Elam said.

As the problem of sex trafficking grows both locally and globally, the chances of the average person being able to help increases. Alavi said both sex trafficking victims and establishments are sometimes in plain sight, but most people just aren’t aware.

“For example, a person could see a prostitute on the street and think to themselves that she is doing it on her own accord,” Alavi said. “What they don’t realize is that she is more than likely being put on the street against her will.”

One of the OATH Coalition’s key goals is to change this mindset of the public in order to recognize victims.

“Our purpose is to educate, to help people understand what’s going on and to stop the misunderstandings,” Elam said. “We want people to understand how to identify differences between things like a criminal and a victim to help those who can’t help themselves.”

Another example of sex trafficking in plain sight is the use of immigrant women brought from overseas.

Elam explained that seemingly innocent establishments such as nail salons and massage parlors are often used for commercialized sex acts.

“Traffickers bring in victims with the impression that they will have a better life in America,” Elam said. “Yet when they get them here, they force them to ‘work off their debt’ by subjecting them to the sex trafficking business.”

Alavi explained to those in attendance that in addition to the forced physical control and selling of minors for sexual acts, another facet of sex trafficking includes the production and distribution of child pornography.

“The United States is the No. 1 producer and purchaser of child pornography in the world,” Alavi said. “On the (statewide) local level, Oklahoma City ranks third for Internet child pornography searches.”

Amy Wilson, OCCC learning skills professor, was actually the impetus behind Alavi’s presentation at the college. She said her class’ interest in sex trafficking grew after she assigned a research paper over the subject.

“What really surprised my students was the fact that a lot of traffickers aren’t caught despite the intensity of the problem,” Wilson said.

As a result, some students from Wilson’s class have decided to take action by getting involved. Biology major Amber Rinestine has since joined the OATH Coalition.

“We’ve got to stop this problem before it gets even worse,” Rinestine said. “There isn’t a lot being done about it, so we have to step up and do it ourselves.”

However, there is an explanation as to why some trafficking incidents go unnoticed by law enforcement.

“It’s an economic issue,” Elam said. “Law enforcement is understaffed, underfunded and undertrained. They can only handle so many cases, the resources simply aren’t there.”

In the U.S. State Department’s Trafficking in Persons Report for 2011, their findings agreed with Elam’s statement. According to the TIP report, the Department of State recommends “improved data collection on human trafficking cases at the federal, state and local levels.”

Despite limited resources and attention, there have been notable sex trafficking busts. In her presentation, Alavi told attendees about an 18-month sting operation conducted by the FBI.

“Stormy Nights” targeted multiple Oklahoma truck stops where a dozen sex trafficking pimps were arrested. Twenty-three young girls were rescued, including a victim as young as 13 years old.

“Stormy Nights created a completely new understanding on the trafficking of minors,” Elam said. “The more aware people become, the more ability we have to report incidents such as these, so that’s why our focus is on spreading the word.”

COMMUNITY | There are 33 active student organizations on campus

Clubs are an opportunity

MIKE WORMLEY

Community Writer
communitywriter@occc.edu

OCCC has 33 active clubs that a student can participate in. These clubs are divided into categories, on the Student Life website, that include: religious, department, special interest, cultural, and honors.

The Religious student organizations include Baptist Collegiate Ministries, Chi Alpha, Christ Campus Fellowship and Christians on Campus.

Karlen Grayson, the student clubs and organizations assistant in the office of Student Life, said Baptist Collegiate Ministries has the most meetings of any student organization with two meetings every week.

The department-centered student organizations include the Engineering Club, the Health Professions Club, the Multicultural Business Club, the Nursing Students Association, the Oklahoma Biotechnology Association, the Photography Club, Psychology Club, Sociology Club, Student Emergency Medical Sciences Association, Student Occupational Therapy Association, Student Physical Therapy Assistant Organization, Students In Free Enterprise, and The Art Guild.

The special interest student organizations include Advocates of Peace, College Democrats, College Republicans, Gay Straight Alliance, Moving In a New Direction, Oklahoma Intercollegiate Legislature, and The Gamer Guild of OCCC.

The cultural student organizations include the Black Student Association, Hispanic Organization to Promote Education, International Student Association, and the Native American Student Association.

The honors organizations include Kappa Beta Delta, Phi Theta Kappa and Psi Beta.

Student organization members said they focus on opportunities clubs make available.

Shawn Perkins, pre-engineering major and College Republicans member, said, "It gives opportunities to get involved on campus and express our beliefs."

Perkins also recommends giving a struggling organization a chance over starting a new one with similar goals.

Samir Howard, business major and member of the Black Student Association and the Gamer Guild of OCCC, said, "It opens doors to opportunities, to have new friends ... meet different majors and faculty members, and meet students from other schools in organizations similar to yours."

Grayson said students interested in joining a club should watch for the Student Organization Fair in the spring, and on www.occc.edu/studentlife.

The spring Student Organization Fair will be 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Wednesday, Jan. 25, in the general dining area.

NICK SANFORD OFFERS COMMUNITY A CHANCE TO PACK THE PENN SQUARE MALL THEATER

Student film set to premiere at local theater

SEAN M. TOLBERT

Sports Writer

sportswriter@occc.edu

An OCCC student film will be screened at 10 p.m. Saturday, Dec. 17, at Penn Square Mall's Dickinson Theater.

Speaking about his film "Control-Alt-Destroy," OCCC film major Nick Sanford said he is looking to give moviegoers a chance to rekindle their relationship with what, he feels, movies are suppose to be about: entertainment.

"Movies are a lot different than they used to be," Sanford said.

"We're just trying to get back to a simpler form of filmmaking — we're getting sick of 'goofy, artistic' movies that [only] four people get and that, somehow, still get funding."

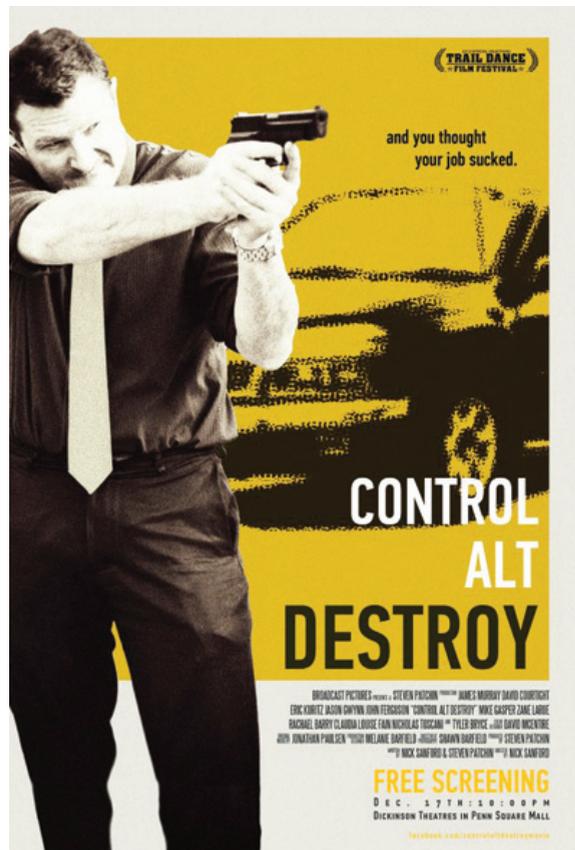

"Control-Alt-Destroy" was shot on a budget of approximately $5,400 over the course of 13 days in June. It follows three peculiar office workers who discover that armed thieves have overrun their offices and taken the staff hostage.

Sanford described the movie as an attempt to return to "the basics" of what films can be for moviegoers: a fun, engrossing escape, peppered with some action and humor.

"It's satirical in a way," Sanford said.

"But for the most part it's a fun 'action' movie that doesn't belittle the intelligence of the audience like a lot of films that are being released seem to do."

The project, a brainchild of Sanford and OCCC Film and Video Lab Assistant Steven Patchin, had been two years in the making, was captured at a location he knew exceptionally well.

COURTESY NICK SANFORD

"Control-Alt-Destroy," An OCCC student film will be screened at 10 p.m. Saturday, Dec. 17, at Penn Square Mall's Dickinson Theater.

"We have a family-owned office building where we would go after hours and we suddenly thought to ourselves: 'we really need to shoot something here,'" he said.

"But [office] comedies have been done — let's do something like 'Die Hard.'"

Creating a film with a budget and hiring a crew were not luxuries that Sanford had become accustomed to so assigning responsibilities to others didn't faze the experienced filmmaker.

"It was very different from high school—I wasn't used to having a crew," Sanford said.

"But it wasn't hard [to delegate] because I trusted everybody and it took a lot of stress off of me."

Sanford cited some of the key creative elements of the film as the cast and crew themselves.

"The core actors were all improv artists from around here," Sanford said.

"Probably 60 to 70 percent of the dialogue was made up by them on the spot."

Sanford was also helped by fellow OCCC film students behind the camera as well.

Experienced OCCC student filmmaker Shawn Barfield worked as Sanford's director of photography.

"[Shawn] was amazing to work with and brought a lot of experience to the production," Sanford said. "He really helped me to create the look I was going for."

Along with Barfield's work, Sanford was aided on the production side of the film by Patchin.

"Steven really helped organize the crew for us," Sanford said. "There were producers that contributed funds to us but it was Steven who brought the production side together."

One process that took the majority of Sanford's time was editing the film.

"I started editing the film the night after we wrapped shooting and put the finishing touches on it around Nov. 5," Sanford said.

"Most of the time went into constructing sound rather than the actual cutting of the film itself."

The finished product was first sent to the Oklahoma-based Trail Dance Film Festival in Duncan, and Sanford said he hopes to continue to be accepted at other festivals.

"We're going to try and get into as many festivals as we possibly can," Sanford said.

There is one festival in particular that Sanford is shooting for above all others, however.

"We've entered the film into consideration for SXSW (South by Southwest) in Austin; we're not getting ahead of ourselves but we're hopeful," he said.

Before any festivals screen the film however, friends, fans, family and students will have the opportunity to see the film for themselves. Sanford is optimistic about the turnout.

"We're hoping to pack the theater's 181 seats," he said.

"We hope that it's funny and entertaining because we're really happy with how it's turned out."

Student says South and North Korea may unite

JAMES KRUMMEL

News Writing Student

South and North Korea most likely will unite again, said South Korean international student Seok-hyun Hwang.

Recently Hwang, who is studying journalism at OCCC, gave a presentation for the Multicultural Business Club about his home country.

With the help of a prepared slide show, Hwang described South Korea in detail, noting some interesting facts that most people don't know.

Hwang described his hometown of Seoul, the capital of South Korea which has a population of 10.5 million.

Hwang said he does not need a car to get from place to place because the city has a good public transportation system.

In discussing the 20th century history of Korea, Hwang explained that Japan occupied Korea from 1910 to 1955.

As soon as Japan left, the U.S. and Russia became involved and Korea split in the north and south.

Many people understand that North Korea and South Korea are split but most do not know what caused it.

Hwang explained that Korea split when tensions caused the country to embrace two different political systems.

In addition, Hwang pointed out that South Korea has become a manufacturing giant.

"Hyundai, Samsung, and LG are all South Korean companies."

Hwang presented two music videos that showed the audience what youth culture is like in South Korea.

Unfortunately, Hwang said, relations with North Korea are very poor.

Though still in a state of "cease fire" after the treaty that ended the Korean War, North Koreans cannot leave their country at will and South Koreans are rarely allowed to enter.

Hwang admitted he had some misconceptions when he arrived in the U.S.

"I was expecting more modern buildings," he said. He found city life in Oklahoma to be similar to what he was used to — minus good public transportation.
